Hi, I hope so, I need an apartment. The sooner the better. My friends suggested I try you. That's what we're here for. The famous Student Housing Office. By the way, we call apartments here. Anyway, let's get started. First, I'll take down a few details to put in our database. Hopefully we'll help you find some digging before the mandate starts. yes, by the station. Far, too far if I have classes every day. So you want a place closer. Susan: Up to half an hour by bike, and with a bus service where the weather is too bad. John: Yes, I cycle here as well. It keeps me in shape and no hassle trying to find a parking spot. Do you want to share your accommodation or live on your own? He lives alone. I'll be too busy with my studies to bother with roommates. How much rent do you want to pay? About $500 a month. Some what? Some digging. It's British slang for rented accommodation. Susan: Oh, dear - apartments, dig! - and I'm an English major! That's all right. But back to business. Okay, last name? Susan: Cartier. John: Cartier? Sounds French. Susan: Yes, my ancestors were French, John: Wow! Do you speak French? I was born and I grew up in Montreal, so I'm bilingual. That's great. And your name? Susan Marie, this is M-A-R-I-E. I get it. Nationality? Canadian, I think. Susan: Right. And your student number? Susan: CA04628. Okay, do you have a contact number? It's 6534 9087. I'll stay with my friends until I find a place of my own. John: 6534 9187. No, 9087. I get it. How about a cell phone? I'll pick up one later and I'll tell you the number. John: OK. 653 - that's way over the other side of town, right? That's pretty much it, but it's not going to be very big. Would a bed be okay? A bed babysitter? John: More British English for you. It is a single room with cooking facilities. Some are pretty cute, Susan: it's going to be okay. But I don't want to share a bathroom, and it has to be clean, bright, and not by a noisy main road. John: OK, but you came a little late, just four days to go before the deadline starts, just got shared accommodation on our files at the moment. But don't worry, we'll do everything we can. Susan: Oh, Oh, Forgotten. Does the rent here include utilities? John: Usually not. You have to pay for gas, electricity and water yourself. How about a warehouse? Most owners want three months in advance, which is also a security deposit. And make sure you read the lease carefully, especially small print. Thanks. I'll do that. Anything else you want to know? Not at this point. Make sure you tell me your cell phone number. Susan: It will. Anyway, I have to go now. I'm meeting some friends in the cafeteria, John: OK, we're in touch, bye for now. I'll see you. And welcome to the main library of the University of British Columbia. My name is George Martin, and I'm the chief librarian. I'm happy to give you a brief introduction to our library. I think I'm qualified. I've been working here since 1961, when the only electrical or electronic stuff here was the lights. Oh, and the phones, of course. Mechanical typewriters and slide rules then, no fancy laptops and mobile phones. Computers? In a library? No way! It was all on paper. If you needed to find something, you went to the book index, and if that didn't help you, you asked one of the staff, and if that didn't work, you told your teacher that you couldn't write the book because the library didn't have the book you needed. God, you students have it so easily these days. We have about fifteen computer terminals on each of the four floors. If you know the title or the author, then you can find out if they've got it in seconds, and if we do, where it is. If we haven't got it, then you can find out if the public libraries and other university libraries in Vancouver and Burnaby have. You know that library books are arranged according to the numbers on the back of each book. Does anyone know the name of this numbering system? Right, the Dewey Decimal Classification System, which was invented by Melville Dewey, the American librarian, not the philosopher John Dewey. In Melville's time, book classification systems were in a real mess, so he decided to do something about it, and around 1876 he came up with the system we still use today. Look up there, and you can see a list of basic categories: 000 - General, which includes all sorts of things: encyclopedias, news media, etc., etc. Then 100 – Philosophy ߪ Psychology; 200 – Religion; 300 – Social Sciences; and so on up to 900 – Geography ߪ History. With over four million in fact, closer to five million now, in our library, we have a lot to thank Melville for. Now, if you look up to the right, you can see the look of the library. It's all very. Very. We start here, on the first floor, or on the ground floor of our British cousins, with three zeros – General, and so on to the fourth floor, with all 800 and 900. By the way, you won't find books on medicine and dentistry here. They're all over the Medical Library, east of the faculty of medicine. Now, if you look at the plan on the second floor, you can see that we have a library of CDs and DVDs. The music collection covers almost everything we call serious, from Bach and Beethoven, folk music, blues, early rock, jazz and more. But I'm sorry, no punk, heavy metal, rap or hip-hop yet. For oriental music, it would be the work of Peking, you'll have to go to the Center for Asian Studies or Chinatown. A word about taking out the books. The usual lending period is two weeks, but a few cards in high demand can only be taken out for two days. And I suggest you try to return the cards on time. The fine is a dollar a day for the first week, and a dollar a day after that. That's a lot of beer money! One last thing, your new smart student card is also your library card, and you can also use it to pay at the student cafeteria. So don't lose it, or you'll starve without library books. Okay, I think that's enough here. Let's go to the second floor. But maybe we can work something out together. Jack. We should talk about it with our academic supervisor, but she's gone until Thursday, which could make it a little later to register for some of the most popular courses. That's my concern, lucky we're doing the same thing, so some of our courses will be the same and we can go together. What did your parents say when you told them you were going to be an English major? My dad thinks I'm crazy. You'll never find a decent job when you graduate. Teacher or secretary, that's all you're going to be good for but he's an engineer, so what would he know? What about your mother? He likes to read and dreams of becoming a great writer or something. So she's all for it, but your parents? Actually, I agree. They're both teachers, and they're always moaning about the terrible English of most of their students. They blame computers, computer games, for being exact. Very few of their students ever read novels. Mary: Anyway, let's take a look at some of these courses. I thought I'd take Latin. People say they're going to train my brain and help with French and Spanish, as well as English. I think it's a bit of a dead tongue. If you want to learn Spanish or Italian or something, then learn it directly. I did Latin at la school, and besides helping me guess the meaning of some new words, with a Latin root, was a waste of time, Leave Latin to archaeologists and theologians. I think you're right. No Latin. Actually, I'm playing with the idea of doing journalism later. Foreign languages are always useful for a journalist. Maybe I'll take oral French. Jack: That's exactly what I thought. What are the classes? Let me see it. French 100. Nine to twelve months in the morning in the language lab and two to five afternoons Thursday in the reading room I think are both in the Faculty of Arts building. Are. I checked the language lab yesterday. Very modern, and not too big. Room for about 30, so the teacher will have more time for individuals. Not like that 50-seat place in my old school. Okay, French 100 it is. What's next? I was thinking Creative Writing 201. What do you think? It's one of our classes, fool. You have to take it, along with the History of English, early American literature and sociology 100. Damn I forgot. So, including French, we'll do five courses within that term. How many hours of class is that in total? Well, let's see. History of English, three hours every Tuesday morning. American Lit, two to five afternoons Tuesday. Creative Writing, nine to 12 P.D. Sociology, two to five Friday afternoons. That's 18, including three hours in the language lab. Sounds enough to me, especially in our first term. And times won't interfere with the preparation of the mv swim team. All the work, no play makes Jack a boring boy. Mary: You certainly need that creative writing course! Let's have the coffee. I wonder if any of you have discovered the library, but I think it's way too early for that. It's even better to see that we have a full house. I hope you're all here for Environment & Development 101, because if you're not, then you're in the wrong reading room. By the way, my name is John Robertson, and I'll be the lead lecturer for this course, but we'll have some guest lecturers from time to time. And no one left. Great, I think that means you intend to take this course. OK, so it says in the ad outside, today I'm going to describe the main content and the purposes of the course, and hopefully add to the enthusiasm that brought you here today. Does anyone know who Howard Odum was? Right, he's known as the father of ecology. He once said, everything is connected to everything else. And this explains the design of this course. As human knowledge expands, most courses, even courses in the first year, year, and more specialised. You are learning more and more about less and less. This course is quite different. In the 72 hours of this course - remember that you will get two credits for it instead of the usual one - we will try to achieve three main objectives, namely, we will try to get an understanding of what is happening on planet Earth, why it is happening, and hopefully to find some answers to the many problems that we will talk about. The first few lectures will be an overview of the more serious current trends that are of such great concern not only for greenies, which means environmentalists like me, and organizations like Greeneache and Friends of the Earth, but also for more and more ordinary people, and even a few politicians and corporate leaders. So we're going to look at things like global warming; loss, in particular, of tropical forests; persistent organic chemicals, known as gender benders, as they can seriously affect the sexual development of animals; desertification; the serious global problem of overfishing; and accelerating biodiversity loss – If humans continue like this, about 50 percent of the world's plant and animal species will probably be extinct by the middle of this century, that's the environmental bit. remains with development? We're going to think a lot about this. If the purpose of development is to improve the quality of life, which probably means making people happier, then we need to think about this thing called happiness. In modern times, we have become consumers in the great consumer society. Are we a better pier than the Bushmans in the Kalahari Desert in southern Africa? And if common sense tells us that sea level rise, gender benders and all other aspects of a worsening environment will sooner or later put a big brake on consumption, why - given the warnings from the vast majority of scientists in the world - are things, generally, continue to get worse? This brings us to psychology, sociology, and, of course, politics, economics, and even philosophy. We won't have time to get into each of these areas in depth. For our immediate purposes, this is not necessary. Because the basic goal is to help us develop a model, a dynamic model that integrates the main forces leading -ing to environmental degradation and those opposing forces that promote environmental administration. This is a high order for us to do as individuals, so we will be divided into teams, and each team will focus on one or two specific issues, while integrating the main findings and arguments of the other teams into their work. Well, we have a lot of great work to do. Back in 15 minutes.
